He is a tower unleaning. But how will he not break, If Heaven assault him with full wind and sleet, And what uproar tall trees concumbent make!

More than a hundred years, more than a hundred feet Naked he rears against the cold skies eruptive; Only his temporal twigs are unsure of seat,

And the frail leaves of a season, which are susceptive Of the mad humors of wind, and turn and flee In panic round the stem on which they are captive.

Now a certain heart, too young and mortally Linked with an unbeliever of bitter blood, Observed, as an eminent witness of life, the tree,

And exulted, wrapped in a phantasy of good: "Be the great oak for its long winterings Our love's symbol, better than the summer's brood."

The world is too much with us; late and soon, Getting and spending, we lay waste our powers; Little we see in Nature that is ours; We have given our hearts away, a sordid boon! This Sea that bares her bosom to the moon, The winds that will be howling at all hours, And are up-gathered now like sleeping flowers, For this, for ever everything, we are out of tune; It moves us not.—Great God! I'd rather be A Pagan suckled in a creed outworn; So might I, standing on this pleasant lea, Have glimpses that would make me less forlorn; Have sight of Proteus rising from the sea; Or hear old Triton blow his wreathed horn.

William Wordsworth

The brotherhood of man has been lost in the milieu of famine and war and pestilence. Each is for his own but now organized to serve their own. Where goals are highest man must strive the harder. When unreachable the demon of corruption subtly appears. Appealing to the gods with archaic litanies, the cracks of doom spread. Rapidly, Distraught, they are caught in circles of Myrdal's making. Fighting to maintain the primacy of man today: the ego. Collectivized in the facades of brotherhood's overworked cliches, they shall be preserved for the rewards are many-many times too many but only age will illustrate the legend. Present abuses can lead to reactions from within but is it worthwhile to continue the facade—lip service can never impart the love of Damian and Phythias. How nature and time helped an artist create a masterpiece

Römish-Germanisches Museum. Cologne, Germany

Fashioned sometime during the period of the Middle or Later Roman Empire, the soft sheen of this perfume flask is an accident of time—its glowing quality the result of more than fifteen hundred years of aging. Its design, however, is a deliberate—and successful—work of art. Like so many artists before and since, its maker turned to nature in search of a decorative motif. Inspired by the gentle curves and graceful simplicity of the scallop shell, he created a masterpiece in glass.

Scientists, too, turn to nature for inspiration, for it is their task to equate the offerings of nature with the things man can use. At Shell, hundreds of scientists—inspired by one of nature's most versatile natural resources, petroleum—are engaged in turning ideas into substances useful to man. This imaginative research results in products that perform better, last longer and cost less. Millions know these petroleum and chemical products by the sign of the familiar shell.

The world today is looking for men who are not for sale; men who are honest, sound from centre to circumference, true to the heart's core; men with consciences as steady as the needle to the pole; men who will stand for the right if the heavens totter and the earth reels; men who can tell the truth and look the world right in the eye;

Men who neither brag nor run; men who neither lag nor flinch; men who can have courage without shouting it; men in whom the courage of everlasting life runs still, deep and strong; men who know their message and tell it; Men who know their place and fill it; men who know their business and attend to it; men who will not lie, shirk or dodge; men who are not too lazy to work not too proud to be poor; men who are willing to eat what they have earned and wear what they have paid for;

Men who are not ashamed to say "No" with emphasis and who are not ashamed to say, "I can't afford it."
